The Judgment No One Talks About

In 1992, something extraordinary happened in a quiet Ohio courtroom. A judge ruled that Jeff Dahmer—along with his father Lionel, his mother Joyce, and his stepmother Shari—was legally responsible for the wrongful death of Steven Hicks.

Let that sink in: Jeff's parents and Shari Dahmer were found guilty.

The charge? Negligent entrustment. The legal term implies that Lionel and Joyce and Shari Dahmer - gave Jeff access to something dangerous.

Not a gun.

Not a weapon.

A car.

And what happened next makes the entire myth start to unravel.

Found Guilty, But Not Liable?

Despite being found responsible, Jeff's parents - and Shari Dahmer - faced no financial penalty.

No jail time.

No restitution.

No civil consequences.

Instead, the entire $10 million judgment was placed solely on Jeff:

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A judge has found confessed serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer guilty under civil law in the 1978 slaying of a Summit County man.

Steven Hicks, 18, of Coventry Township, was the first of Dahmer's 17 victims. The others were killed in the Milwaukee area.

The judgment, issued Tuesday by Summit County Common Pleas Judge James Williams, means Hicks' survivors may be entitled to damages, but that will be decided later.

Dahmer has been sentenced to life in prison in both Wisconsin and Ohio. The judgment was issued in response to a $50 million wrongful death suit filed by Martha Hicks, the mother of Steven Hicks.

Edward DiGiantonio, lawyer for Mrs. Hicks, said Dahmer was given notice of the suit at the Wisconsin prison, where he is serving 15 consecutive life sentences.

The suit alleged that Dahmer's parents knew or should have known Dahmer "was deviant and destined to cause injury and death to others." The suit charged Dahmer himself with wrongful death and said the parents were negligent.

This isn't just irregular. It's unheard of.

In standard wrongful death civil cases, if multiple parties are found liable, they all share the burden of damages.

Not this time.

It was as if the State reached an unspoken agreement:

"Jeff will carry the narrative. He will absorb the blame. He will play the monster. And everyone else will walk away untouched."

Negligent Entrustment—And the Car That Vanished

The charge of negligent entrustment could only have stemmed from Lionel and Jo allowing Jeff access to a vehicle.

Why?

Because Jeff was an adult at the time, and there's no cap on damages if a car is invo
For more information about this, see Jeff Dahmer's \$10 Million Judgment: Why I His Parents Escape Liability?

This is the car that was allegedly involved in Hicks' disappearance.

But in the fake news version of the story, the car merely picks Hicks up. We're told Jeff bludgeoned Hicks with a barbell and dissolved the body in acid.

So why did the Ohio court base liability on something the public was never told at

Because the Ohio trial and the Milwaukee myth were running on two different tracks. One was legal. The other was theatrical.

Jeff Dahmer played the role of scapegoat

The $10 Million Ritual

Let's talk about the number.

Ten million dollars. Not nine. Not eleven. A round, mythic, ritualistic number. It sounds less like a legal judgment and more like a symbolic offering.

A spiritual debt. Paid in full. By one man.

And the price of this absolution?

Jeff becomes the permanent face of evil. A horror story on two legs. A grotesque symbol that keeps the attention off everyone else, especially off the Archdiocese of Milwaukee and its “Caiaphas,” the homosexual Archbishop Rembert Weakland.

What Jeff Gave Up—And What They Gained

In exchange for this role, Jeff’s parents avoided total ruin.

The Hicks family got a judgment on paper. (They likely told the Hicks family, “We can’t give you money. But we’ll give you a sentence so harsh, so total, it will satisfy world.”)

The State avoided scrutiny.

The police, the Archdiocese, and local institutions escaped deeper questioning.

And Jeff? He became a scapegoat. Not just a man accused of murder, but a contain for every sin and failure the system couldn’t face.

Young Jeff Dahmer with his cat

If you know your Old Testament, you know that a scapegoat isn't killed in front of crowd. It's banished, exiled, loaded with guilt, and erased from the community.

That's what happened to Jeff Dahmer.

It Wasn't a Confession. It Was a Transaction.

Jeff's confession was oddly clean, theatrical, and mythic. It read like a script.

Because it was one.

It was never about what he did. It was about what he agreed to carry. A story so grotesque and saturated with horror that no one would look behind it.

The Monster Was Made to Protect Everyone Else

When you look at the civil judgment—and the eerie silence that followed it—the s of the ritual becomes clear:

- Jeff was useful
- His family was protected because of his sacrifice
- The real crimes stayed buried

And we got a serial killer story that never quite added up.

Because it wasn't supposed to.

It wasn't justice. It wasn't the truth.

It was a deal.

And the price was a man's soul.

The Archdiocese of Milwaukee Chose the Goat

The Archdiocese of Milwaukee—the institution that should have upheld the gospel of Jesus Christ—instead followed a different gospel: the “Gospel” of Leviticus.

They didn’t act like believers in Christ. They acted like the high priests of the Old Testament:

- Choosing a scapegoat
- Marking him with guilt
- Burdening him with institutional sin
- And casting him out into the wilderness

In Leviticus 16, this is called atonement. But in the New Testament? That ritual was fulfilled in Jesus Christ.

No more scapegoats.

No more blood carried into the wilderness.

No more lives sacrificed for others' sins.

Yet the Archdiocese of Milwaukee wanted one more. So they picked Jeff Dahmer.

And the system agreed: Let him carry it all.

They said they followed Jesus Christ.

But, they used a goat.

This is so beautifully written—it truly struck a chord with me. It breaks my heart to see how Jeff was dehumanized, his entire identity as a complex, suffering human being reduced to a single, monstrous label. He was turned into a symbol of evil while those who failed him—the adults, the institutions, the society that looked the other way—walked away without consequence. It's deeply disturbing, even sickening, how easily the blame was displaced, and how little attention was paid to the roots of his pain and isolation. Thank you, sincerely, for daring to speak the truth and for shedding light on the uncomfortable realities that so many are quick to ignore.
