The photographs shown below are freely available online and depict the blue barrel found at the crime scene after Jeff Dahmer's "arrest" on 22 July 1991.

If you're familiar with this story, you'll know that the blue barrel allegedly contained three dismembered bodies, all "victims" from 30 June 1991 and after. (The timeline of the official story are questionable since the barrel wasn't purchased until 12 July

The Clean Blue Barrel

Take a close look. Note how clean this "crime scene" is. The barrel is shiny and there are no bloodstains on the carpet around the barrel.

Does this depict the madness of a perpetrator who was out of control by this stage of the case as we were told by the mainstream media?

The Carpet Cleaner's Testimony

The second and last visit by the carpet cleaner, James Poetz, was on 17 June 1991. This visit was almost a month before the blue barrel was purchased on 12 July 1991. Even t

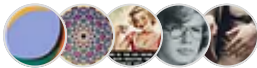

James Poetz states that the apartment was clean and tidy, just as it was on his first visit on 05 November 1990. You can watch James Poetz make this statement here.

According to Poetz, he didn't notice a bad smell in the apartment or anything unusual. This is also what Sopa Princewill, the manager of the Oxford Apartments, and Jeff Dahmer's neighbor, Vernell Bass, said. (See the above link.) Jeff Dahmer wasn't trying to hide anything or being secretive in any way.

James Poetz said there was a 2 x 3' diameter stain on the bedroom carpet on his first visit on 05 November 1990, and noted that this could be blood or red wine. It was inconclusive, in other words. James probably now thinks it could be blood, given the circumstances he now finds himself in, poor guy. Both blood and red wine are notoriously difficult to remove, especially if not immediately cleaned. Have you ever spilled a bottle of red wine on a light carpet? It's depressing.

On his second visit on 17 June 1991, approximately nine months after his first visit, James Poetz states that he didn't notice any additional stains on the bedroom carpet.

This case defies logic on numerous grounds and this is yet another example.

Jeff's various unexpected visitors all said how clean & tidy his apt was. Even Jeff himself said so in his best efforts according to his 'confession' to keep people out..he was happy to let visitors in.

Then the FBI comes up with a long list of bloodstained furnishings. That no-one else had seen notice..
