If you haven't already seen it, here's our theory about what might have caused Jeff Dahmer to agree to play a gay serial killer in a fake news story.

A few days ago, someone on our subreddit offered another theory about what could have made Jeff Dahmer agree to play a gay serial killer. Here's that post in its entir

What could have made Jeff Dahmer agree to play the role of a gay serial killer?

I think that in the summer of 1988 Jeff confessed to the accidental murder of Steven Hick. It was the 10th anniversary of Steven's disappearance, perhaps he saw an article in the newspaper and could no longer remain silent. And I think he even confessed that he buried Steven in the woods. I don't believe that after Steven's death he was dismembered or something like that. Jeff buried him, who helped him I don't know, Lionel or someone else).

But he confessed to the wrong person.

So, Boyle appears on the scene, he starts talking to Jeff, looks at him closely, says that since it was an accident, the sentence may be less. He behaves like a kind caring uncle, but in fact begins to grooming him. I think Jeff didn't realize it right away, but as soon as he did, he said he'd rather go to jail.

Remember the story with the ring that Jeff laid in August 1988? White gold ring with a large topaz worth $ 1500. He got less than 200 for it, it looks like he just wanted to get rid of it.

And who wore such rings? Boyle. This is very clearly seen during the trial, the ring is almost identical.

And a month later they literally put him in jail, having fabricated a case of molestation.

I think the reason why the address of the apartment in which he lived at that time is not displayed in the search is because the apartment was not rented by him. He just lived there a while.

Maybe Boyle rented this apartment, maybe it was one of the apartments where pedophile priests arranged meetings...everything can be.

And while Jeff was waiting for the trial, they found Steven's skeleton and scattered some bones near Jeff's home in Ohio, which automatically cast suspicion on his father and stepmother.

And he had no choice but to admit his guilt in molestation.

So at the same time, Boyle took revenge on Jeff for rejecting him, and they pinned him to a wall with evidence of Hicks' death. After that, they had complete control over Jeff.

Here's Jeff Dahmer's explanation (from his confession) about the above-mentioned ring :

Regarding information received from the Brookfield Police Department that an individual by the name of Jeffrey DAHMER pawned a ring on 8-8-88, at a gold and silver office located in their city, to which Mr. DAHMER stated he in fact did buy a blue topaz ring with a gold setting from Bailey, Banks, and Biddle, located at Northridge Mall in Milwaukee for approximately $1500, sometime in the summer months of 1987. He stated he bought this ring because he has always had an interest in jewelry and especially rings that at the time he felt the large topaz was attractive to him. He stated that approximately a year later, because of his drinking habits, he was running low on cash and took that ring to a gold and silver establishment on Bluemound Road, where after bargaining with the individual working behind the desk, he obtained $189 for his topaz ring. He stated the ring did not belong to any of his victims and he again denied selling any of the jewelry which he obtained from any of his victims and that if there was any jewelry any of his victims, he simply threw them out in the trash, along with body parts.

Here's a photo of Gerald Boyle wearing a ring very similar to that which Jeff pawned in August 1988:

Interestingly, this person's theory answers a question we had about why they were able to fit all the remains ("286 bone and tooth fragments") they found belonging to Steven Hicks into a shoe box.

Scientists kept fragments from Dahmer's alleged first victim

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — A letter from the Smithsonian Institution shows scientists seeking DNA evidence have retained at least 15 bone fragments from Jeffrey Dahmer's alleged first victim, against the family's wishes.

The analysis of Steven Hicks' DNA pattern — a kind of genetic fingerprint — would involve pulverizing fragments and testing them.

The Sept. 26 letter to Summit County Coroner William A. Cox contradicts Cox's assertion that only two bone fragments from the remains of Hicks were withheld for further study. That concession from Cox came two days after a statement in which he said all the remains were returned.

The letter was attached to an amended court filing Monday requesting a judicial order forcing Cox to return all bone fragments.

"We can't believe a word that man has told us now," said Martha Hicks, of Coventry Township, whose son was murdered in Summit County in 1978. Dahmer, who faces another 15 murder counts in Milwaukee, told authorities there Hicks was his first victim.

Martha Hicks and her husband, Richard Hicks, have been trying to get back all their son's remains for burial since learning Sept. 14 that Cox incorrectly told them all the remains had been returned.

Mrs. Hicks said Monday she was resigned to not getting all the fragments back until at least late November. Cox, who said last month at a news conference that tests had conclusively identified the remains as Steven's, now says more testing needs to be done.

Martha Hicks said Summit County Prosecutor Lynn Slaby had warned her that a skilled defense lawyer conceivably could find a way to get Dahmer's statements thrown out. Without the so-called DNA fingerprinting the fragments are being kept to obtain, "if the confession is thrown out, there is no case, period," she said.

Last July, Summit County authorities collected 286 bone and tooth fragments believed to be Steve Hicks' at the house in Bath Township where Dahmer resided in 1978.

The Smithsonian listed fragment from Steven Hicks' ribs, leg bones, shoulder blade, hand and other body parts that it withheld for analysis by the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Washington.

The same person suggests that perhaps there was an accident involving a barbell:

Jeff was coming back from the cinema, saw Steven, they start talking, decided to hang out together.

At home they drinking beer, smoking weed and pulling weights.

What could have gone wrong? Everything.

They were drunk, high...

Maybe Jeff couldn't hold the barbell, it slipped out of his hands, fell on Stephen and broke larynx.. Or Steven decided to pull the barbell himself while Jeff was away and it fell on him.

There are many cases when a barbell falls on people and suffocates them because they can't lift it themselves.

The only detail that hasn't changed in Jeff's confession about Steven's death is the barbell

Jeff Dahmer gave three different versions of Hicks's death. The only thing that did change was Steven Hicks being killed by a barbell:

HICKS (2472)

17. White male, 18-19, 6'0, 150 pds., light hair. This victim was killed in June, 1978. After further questioning he identified him as wearing a necklace with brass. He states this individual did not have a shirt, but had jeans and shoes. He states he met him hitchhiking on Cleveland Massing (phonetic) Rd., in Ohio, picked him up, took him to his home to drink beer. Once they got there they were drinking beer in his bed and the victim wanted to leave. He states he hit him in the head with a barbell and then strangled him with the barbell. He states he did not have sex with the victim. He states he then put him under the crawl space under the house. He subsequently dismembered him and put him in three garbage bags. Two weeks later he broke up the bones and threw them in the woods behind his house. He disposed of the knife he used to dismember him and the victim's necklace in the river. This victim was identified by the suspect, through a photo, and by the suspect recalling his last name, that being HICKS Steve M. white male 06-22-59, 2993 Pryor Dr., Ohio, 644-5600. He stated he recalls the name HICKS, because states "you don't forget your first one".

Steven Hicks's death - Jeff Dahmer's confession

DAHMER advised that he should have been caught after the first murder, STEVEN HICKS, but the police were not thorough. DAHMER stated that he did not plan on picking up a hitchhiker killing him, it's just that everything fell into place on a certain day. DAHMER stated that he had been fantasizing about killing since he was about 16 years old, and when he was 18, he was driving down the street and saw a young white male hitchhiking. DAHMER knew that his parents and brother were gone for the weekend, so it gave him the perfect opportunity to act out his fantasies. DAHMER stated that he picked up STEVEN HICKS and then brought him back to his parents' place and then killed him. DAHMER stated that he had sex with the dead body. DAHMER further advised that later that night, during the early morning hours, he had the HICKS body cut up and placed in a trash bag. He was driving down the street when a patrol car stopped him. DAHMER stated that two police officers then ordered him out of the car, and they shined their flashlights in his car and saw the garbage bag, and asked DAHMER what was in the bag and what the terrible smell was, and DAHMER told them that he was just bringing some old garbage to the city dump. DAHMER stated that the officers never looked in the bag and just gave him a ticket for driving left of center.

There's some really interesting comments on the discussion group. The theory is intriguing in that it does support some of the questions asked as to why so few remains were found on Jeff's property. It also explains why the changing stories about the circumstances. The truth doesn't keep changing like that. Interesting that Steven Hicks was said to be left in a field, then the woods. The theory about Boyle is also interesting too. We never see Jeff wearing any kind of trinket, it just doesn't seem his style. His wardrobe is very drab & functional & he seems more interested in books about fish. Boyle on the other hand can't seem to get enough of such things. Jeff was also skint. And the links to the Archdiocese are revealing. Boyle was defended by pedophile priests as their attorney, an enabler, who even tried to justify that the Catholic Church had done a good job..as the previous findings show.

"You never forget your first" combined with the three different stories about how it happened is also interesting. Almost like a bread crumb being left...
